

SCHLOSSBERG-COHEN EXTENDS "AMERICA IN ALL HER GRANDEUR" EXHIBIT THROUGH APRIL 30th

Artist will appear in Denver at GALLERY M to discuss exhibit on April 22, 2009

NEW YORK, March 5, 2009 – Jay Wolf Schlossberg-Cohen has extended his solo exhibit on America's National Parks at GALLERY M in Denver, Colorado.

"AMERICA IN ALL HER GRANDEUR" is the solo exhibition featuring more than 20 original works by international fine artist Jay Wolf Schlossberg-Cohen. The show documents some of our country's most stunning and cherished places. The work is expressed through his flowing, depth filled techniques using layered acrylic cut-outs. One of the highlights of the collection includes two monumental 13 foot acrylic cut-out paintings of one of Joshua Tree National Park.

Accompanying the show are original drawings and studies from his Rocky Mountain National Park series including the recently completed "Lava Cliffs" diptych. Available works are "pen and inks", "acrylics cut outs on paper" and his majestic, near pointillist abstractions of Shenandoah, Rockies and Sonoran ranges.

Schlossberg-Cohen is a recognized American painter whose progressive style stems from mastering color, technique and composition. His exploration with multiple mediums and a deep understanding of masters before him (his works are closely compared to Matisse and Romare Bearden for style and influence) has enabled private collections, museums, dignitaries and communities to benefit from his fascinating talent as a leading American artist.

His works are also featured in the GALLERY M new media and Peck Slip Studio joint production fine art feature documentary titled, "Lubie Love". This film depicts America's oil and auto crisis through the eyes of a trucker as he embarks on a unique and engaging cross country road trip during the fall of 2005.
